COURSE DESCRIPTION AND OBJECTIVES

This graduate seminar course will introduce you to the historical bases, fundamental perspectives, and current challenges of urban and regional planning in the United States. Critical historical episodes and personalities in planning and their influences on contemporary planning practice and thought will be explored. The course will provide you with appreciation of the planning profession and process--its origins and links to other disciplines, its roles and responsibilities, its limitations and potential. This course assumes that you have had little formal prior knowledge of planning history and theory.

COURSE FORMAT AND GRADING

The course will combine two formats-- (1) student-led discussion seminars focused on the reading, and (2) presentations from the instructor that will provide larger contexts to student-led discussions. Maximum student participation is not only encouraged, but is essential.

Grading will be based on the following:

1) Participation and leadership of seminar discussion 30%

2) Attend and summarize two public planning meetings (due October 30 and November 25) 30%

3) Research paper 40%

Topic and outline due October 23
½ draft paper due November 20
Final paper due December 11
Each student is expected to:

1) Engage actively and creatively in seminar discussions.
   -- Read seminar assignments before each class session and contribute to class discussions of historical influences and concepts.
   -- Lead one seminar discussion and prepare for your fellow students a 2 page abstract of the major discussion points from the readings.

2) Attend two meetings of a planning-related public body and write, for each, a 4 page paper describing and evaluating the meeting's substantive and procedural content. Types of public meetings you could attend are those by city and county planning commissions, and state and regional planning bodies. See guidelines later in this syllabus.

3) Write a twenty (20) page paper examining and evaluating one of the following: (A) a historical phase or period; (B) a significant city-builder; or (C) a specific policy, program, or initiative in planning. You should link the specific topic of your paper with at least two phases in urban planning that we have discussed. More specifically:

   (A) historical phase/period: discuss the influence that period had upon subsequent or current planning practice and thought, and examine how earlier phases in planning helped shape your period under study.

   (B) significant city-builder: discuss the influence of that person on subsequent or current planning practice and thought, and examine how earlier phases and personalities in planning helped shaped your person under study.

   (C) a specific policy, program, or initiative in planning: discuss the influence of that policy or program on subsequent or current planning policies, and examine how earlier phases of planning helped shape the parameters of the policy/program under study.

NOTE THESE RESEARCH PAPER DEADLINES
Topic and outline due October 23

GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC PLANNING MEETING ASSIGNMENT

One of the requirements of this course (and 30 percent of grade) is that you attend TWO planning-related public meetings and, for each meeting, summarize and evaluate its substantive and procedural content in a 4-page memorandum. The two meetings must be from different jurisdictions; or from different commissions within the same jurisdiction (for example, planning vs. transportation commissions). In addition, please attach a copy of the meeting agenda (usually available at the meeting) to your report.

The memo should interpret what you witnessed, not provide a detailed itemization of events. Focus on the decision-making processes being followed, on the role of the planner(s) during the meeting, the types of planning issues being addressed, the kinds and quality of information presented during the meeting, and decision outcomes.

The purposes of this assignment are:

1. to increase your familiarity with, and to “de-mystify”, contemporary planning practice and problems.

2. to provide you with a "real-life" perspective on planning which you can use in this course to examine the progression of the urban planning discipline and profession.

The list on the next page provides information about a few of the planning-related public meetings held in the region during the Fall quarter. Many of these public bodies meet regularly two times a month. Some meet in the evening; others during the day. This list provides you with only a sampling. Feel free to pursue and attend other meetings not listed here that are relevant to planning (planning commissions are the surest bet).

All of the meetings listed below are open to the public and will be full of planning agenda items. If you decide to select city council or county board of supervisors meetings, be aware that these meetings usually cover much more than just urban planning issues. Thus, if you decide to attend council or supervisory meetings, it is crucial that you call ahead to find out if planning items are on the agenda, and when they are scheduled to be heard.

For all meetings listed below, call the listed number to find out the public body's regular meeting place and time or check the city’s webpage. Meeting schedules are subject to change, so it is a good idea to phone a few days before you plan to attend to confirm that no last-minute changes have occurred. For jurisdictions not listed, check the city’s webpage for information about planning meeting days and times.
